THE "Featherbed" POTATO PICKER

THIS simple, practical machine will reduce the number of workers required by more than 50%, and will work wherever the tractor and digger can be used. It is designed to enable you to harvest your potato crop with your own farm labour, thereby reducing costs and worry.

The "Featherbed" Potato Picker is untroubled by the problem of stone, haulm and clod separation, the potatoes being picked by hand.

It will harvest more than an acre per day with four pickers, can deal with heavy crops of up to 15/16 tons per acre on that basis and is ideally suited to the farmer growing a small potato acreage.

Either spinner or elevator type diggers can be used to bring the crop to the surface for picking.

The machine is semi-mounted and can be fitted to all popular tractors, but it is an advantage to use a modern tractor with a suitable low forward speed of $\frac{2}{3}$ - $\frac{3}{4}$ m.p.h. It is low priced, trouble free in operation, and requires little or no maintenance.

THE 'Featherbed' POTATO PICKER

THE machine consists of a P.T.O. driven slatted conveyor in line with and leading direct to an elevator. Conveyor and elevator move at right angles to the drill being gathered, the potatoes already having been unearthed by a conventional type digger. Over the conveyor part of the unit is a wooden platform to accommodate two pickers lying in the prone position facing their work, the platform being covered with Dunlopillo cushioning.

The pickers gather the crop manually and place the potatoes quickly on the conveyor which is immediately underneath them, and the tubers are transported up the elevator and into sacks or other containers on the bagging-off platform. One picker on foot follows the machine gathering any potatoes missed by the two on the platform, and a fourth worker removes the bags or alternative receptacles for later collection. These latter two operators relieve from time to time the two pickers on the platform to avoid monotony.

During operation the machine is semi-mounted on the power lift of the tractor, the outside end of the platform being supported by a land wheel. For road transport, this wheel, together with similar wheel, stowed during picking, is mounted to a road axle fitted to the frame for towing in a lengthwise position.
